Day 2, Thu, Sep 26 Zagreb

Zagreb, capital and largest city in Croatia, is situated inland between the Sava River and Mt. Medvednica. Its commercial area dates from the 19th century, but its Old Town centers around the adjoining medieval cities of Gradec and Kaptol. Kaptol was the ecclesiastic town, and the neo-Gothic cathedral is still here, as are a new pedestrian mall and trendy night spots. Gradec is a hilly residential section dotted with lovely 19th century homes.

A city tour includes the Upper Town, the historic city center, the famous Church of St. Mark, the cathedral, the Croatian National Theater and the arcades and sculptures of Mirogoj Park and Cemetery.

The square in front of St. Mark's Church was Gradec's main square until the 19th century. On the eastern side is the neoclassical Croatian Parliament, or Sobor, built in 1910. On the west is the Ban's Court, or Banski Dvori, where the Croatian viceroys lived, and which is now the presidential palace.

Iconic St. Mark's Church in the upper town is famous for its 1880 tile roof with the medieval Croatian coat of arms and the emblem of Zagreb picked out in brilliant colors.

Take a quick cable car ride on Zagreb's historic funicular, built in 1890. With a mere 217 feet of track, this is one of the shortest public-transportation funiculars in the world, but also one of the steepest at a 52% grade. The funicular still provides an important (and fun) way to hop between Zagreb's Lower and Upper Towns, the Donji Grad and Gornji Grad.

Located north of the city center near the base of Mt Medvednica is Mirogoj Park & Cemetery. Often noted as one of Europe's most beautiful cemeteries, the complex was designed in 1876 by Austrian-born architect Hermann Bollé, who created a significant portion of Zagreb's architectural landmarks and city buildings. Among the most well-known of Croatia's citizens interred here are poet and writer Petar Preradović and painter Vladimir Becić, whose grave was designed by renowned Croatian sculptor Ivan Meštrović.
